The human and economic toll of the novel coronavirus, scientifically known as COVID-19, continues to rise across the globe. As the world struggles to mitigate the effects of the coronavirus, an important discussion of its impact on migration, mobility, and individual rights must be front and center in the minds of immigration attorneys and their clients. This program explores the legal basis for measures taken to control the coronavirus and their impact on immigration policies and procedures in the United States, Canada, and Italy.
